Higa's expression became dark, though, when conversation turned to the relocation of U.S. Marine Corps Air Station Futenma in Ginowan, in southern Okinawa Island, to the Henoko district of Nago, in the northern part of the island. He hopes for the reduction of U.S. military bases in his home prefecture, but he also feels indebted to and trust toward the U.S., where he has lived for some 60 years.

"It's painful to have the U.S., my second home country, criticized from a fellow Uchinanchu (Okinawan person)," he said. He can't help but think the problem would be resolved if only the base was relocated somewhere outside Okinawa Prefecture.
